In the summer of 2009, the Wellesley Institute engaged Metropolitan Knowledge International (MKI) to assist in the identification and assessment of the key risks facing the organization. Our goal was to identify the necessary tools to manage these risks and protect the organization in an effective manner.

Viewing risk from the Enterprise perspective provides organizations with an opportunity to break down the traditional department or functional area silos, and to start an internal dialogue to identify, assess, and mitigate the risks collectively.

In the wake of the H1N1 situation and unstable economic climate, risk management is an exercise that non-profit organizations should seriously consider. Join us to learn more about the risk management exercise, share our experience, and connect with other organizational leaders.
